NEW YORK

Matthew Patrick Smyth knew this corner in his house could dazzle guests as easily as it could provide repose for reading the Sunday paper, so he squared off the long, narrow space with a furniture layout that makes the most of the dimensions and natural light. While the sofa is free standing, its careful measurements give the impression of a built-in window seat. Meanwhile, a fabulous and unexpected floor covering warms the slate floors.

ARRANGEMENT

A bull's eye mirror helps expand a small entry space while the vintage storage and cast-iron antler hat rack give it an extra shot of personality. This is an eloquent example of how every nook in a house can go far in expressing its owner's spirit.
